Mechanisms of drug interactions Warfarin is well absorbed, is highly bound to the plasma proteins (99%) and is metabolized via the cytochrome P450 system.¹ It is an indirect anticoagulant, exerting its effect by preventing the internal recycling of oxidized vitamin K to reduced cells under low-intensity RFR, and comprehensive reviews were published (Belyaev, 2010; Consales et al., 2012; Desai et al., 2009; Yakymenko et al., 2011). In the present work, we analyze the results of molecular effects of low-intensity RFR in living cells and model systems, with a special emphasis on oxidative effects and free radical mechanisms.

However, the mechanisms of interaction between persulfate (PS) and soil constituents are not fully understood. In this study, PS decomposition, activation, free radical formation and conversion processes in 10 different soils were examined.

Mechanisms of Interaction between Persulfate and Soil varies with photon energy. Energy transfer is not large until the incident photon is in excess of approximately 100 keV. For low-energy photons, when the scattering interaction takes place, little energy is transferred, regardless of the probability of such an interaction.
